SENIOR JOHN ASHCROFT

JOHN ASHCROFT of Missouri was elected to the United States Senate in 1994, winning 60 percent of the vote and carrying every county in the state. Prior to his election to the Senate, he served Missourians as their governor for two terms, winning reelection in 1988 by 64 percent, the largest percentage of any Missouri governor since the Civil War. As governor and senator, Ashcroft has given high priority to economic growth and restraint in spending and taxation. He balanced eight consecutive budgets as governor. Financial World and City and State magazines credited Ashcroft with making Missouri one of the best financially managed states in the country. Fortune magazine rated him one of the top ten education governors.

In the Senate, Ashcroft has taken a leading role on key issues. In the 105th Congress, he is a principal sponsor of three of the “Top Ten” legislative priorities: new scheduling flexibility for workers struggling to meet the needs of job and family; comprehensive action against violent juvenile crime; and reform of the civil justice system, by updating laws on product liability.

Ashcroft is the author of the landmark Charitable Choice provision of the new welfare reform law. This innovation allows states to work directly with charities and faith-based organizations to move people from dependence to work. He has authored other significant changes to federal law, including discipline and record-keeping reforms that strengthen the ability of schools to deal with dangerous or disruptive students; a ban on the use of federal funds for assisted suicide; and lawsuit protection for people who volunteer in their communities.

He also is the sponsor of major legislation to enact broad-based middle class tax relief, by making payroll taxes deductible, thus ending an unfair double tax on work. A strong proponent of term limits, Ashcroft’s determined efforts secured the first Senate vote on term limits in 50 years.

Ashcroft presently serves on three Senate committees: Judiciary; Commerce, Science, and Transportation; and Foreign Relations. He is the chairman of subcommittees on the Constitution, consumer affairs, and Africa, respectively.

Ashcroft also is widely recognized for his innovative use of technology and the Internet. He co-sponsored the first ever congressional on-line petition for an issue before Congress (term limits), and has taught students in Missouri and across the country about using the Internet to line information as a tool of citizenship.

Ashcroft also has served as Missouri auditor and attorney general. Prior to entering public service, Ashcroft taught business law at the Southern Illinois University School of Law in Springfield.

Ashcroft was born on May 9, 1942. He attended public schools in Springfield, Missouri, and graduated with honors from Yale University in 1964. He met his wife, Janet, at the University of Chicago Law School where they each received law degrees in 1967, and later coauthored two college textbooks. They have three children, Martha Patterson, Jay, and Andrew.

In addition to his public service, Ashcroft enjoys singing and song writing. He is the baritone voice of the Singing Senators quartet with Senators Trent Lott, Larry Craig, and James Jeffords.
